9:30 a.m.: Using Major Genealogical Websites in Your Family History Research

There are many genealogical websites, and we all have our favorite. However, expanding beyond that favorite site and using them all in concert can open new avenues of research and may break down a brick wall. Senior Genealogist Rhonda R. McClure has spent years attacking difficult to solve research cases by combining the power of all the different genealogical websites and will offer insight into how you can do so effectively.

11:00 a.m.: Using Your Computer for Genealogical Analysis

Before genealogical software came out, most researchers used forms. Today's genealogists tend to treat their computers like electronic forms instead of embracing the power of the technology to help with genealogical analysis. Join Rhonda R. McClure as she shows you how to take advantage of not only genealogical software but general software programs in the art of analysis to aid in the examination and evaluation of research problems.

1:00 p.m.: Using Google in Family History Research

Everyone is familiar with Google as a tool to quickly search the entirety of the internet with great ease. That accessibility, however, can produce an overwhelming number of not-so-helpful results. In her years of research expertise, Senior Genealogist Rhonda R. McClure has honed several tips and tricks for you to use to produce the most useful results for your own family history research.

2:15 p.m.: Mining the Treasures in Newspapers

Newspapers contain a wealth of information for genealogists from obituaries to birth and marriage announcements, from feature articles to classifieds. Newspapers also provide historical narrative and a glimpse into your ancestor's everyday life. Join Rhonda R. McClure to learn what information is available, how it can help you in your family history research, and how to access these important resources.
